DISAPPOINTING

It was entirely right that the Ministry should address the nation from the microphone at the end of the war against Japan, but those who listened to Mr. Attlee on Monday night can be sure that he left no doubt that he was moved by his decision partly by recognition of the deep and widespread discontent and the slowness of demobilization. Much of what he had to say is unanswerable. In the present state of Europe it is not a question that we should disband our armed forces too rapidly. It is rather amazing to find the Communist daily newspaper interpreting what the Prime Minister had to say as a declaration that the British troops being sent to Europe to interfere in the internal life of the various countries. This view of the situation is the view of the Soviet Union. It is entirely unanswerable. This is a long time Dr. Neuman who enjoyed the hospitality of the Government.
